There is an urgent call to reclaim, honor and humanize Africa's intellectual identity by affording space for the African intellectual to engage in knowledge generation and sharing. To actualize this call, the DLT is continuing to host programmes that will expedite discourse for change.

It is in such a discourse that as an institution we learn with and from one another, ways in which we can decolonise, indigenise, Africanise and or diversify our governance, leadership and management systems in higher education. The perennial question is, how does an African university retain its Africanness while at the same time it sloughs off negative relics colonialism and stay globally relevant? How does the university, now a corporate entity imbue decoloniality in its governance, leadership and management to ensure the restoration and centralization of ubu-Afrika/bo-Afrika?

You are invited to join us and enjoy the radical, robust but scholarly conversations as the discourse seeks to practically frame and reframe the labyrinths of leading, managing and governing an African University post the colonial era in which it was birthed.
